The MHE Research Foundation As we REACH for the cure!!!

RESEARCH, to help fund research programs, so one day a treatment / cure for MHE can be found.

EDUCATION, to provide clinical information, guides to help benefit both families and physicians.

ADVOCACY, to bring awareness about this disease in all areas throughout the world.

CLINICAL, to help provide informational resources to families enabling them to find the medical care they need.

HOPE, is that the research being conducted on MHE, and the information and resources will bring a better quality of life to the families affected by this disease.

Multiple Hereditary Exostoses ("MHE") is a disease where cartilage-capped bone tumors (exostoses or osteochondromas) grow throughout the body. There is no treatment at this time. It is not uncommon for MHE patients to undergo numerous surgical procedures throughout their lives to remove painful or deforming exostoses. Surgery, physical therapy and pain management are currently the only options available to MHE patients, but their success varies from patient to patient and many struggle with pain, fatigue and mobility problems throughout their lives.
